History: This message has been forwarded.

Robby, the situation is that the settlement, as you know encompassing both our affirmative claims and the settlement by the federal agencies, is working its way up our management approval hierarchy. It is progressing (that is, it is not stalled) and, as I think I have noted before, the speed (or lack thereof) should not be taken as an indication of any substantive concerns that I am aware of. That said, it is a complex settlement and the process is to my knowledge not yet in its most final stages of review. I regret that I do not have more power to influence the course of the process.

It is not clear to me that you would much benefit from another timing prediction on my part, but feel free to request one should you desire. Peter

Peter -- It's been two weeks since you said it probably would take at least another two weeks. Any idea when you will be sending the execution copy? Please let me know. Thanks.

Best regards,
Robby

Robby, we have made progress but I would be surprised if we did not have two weeks ahead of us and it could be more. It could conceivably (but not necessarily) be helpful if you could provide me with a statement of why a particular date is of importance given the developments in the other litigation or for other reasons. Thanks.
Peter

Peter -- Any idea on the timeline?
